FOUNDER and leader of Reign House Chapel in Accra, Prophet Eric Boahen, has warned celebrities to take their spiritual well-being seriously, stressing that fame is not just admiration but a spiritual phenomenon with hidden consequences.
He explained that the limelight attracts both good and bad attention, leaving celebrities vulnerable to depression, mental health struggles, suicide among others.

Speaking with Graphic Showbiz on Monday, September 1, Prophet Boahen, who is no stranger to Ghana's entertainment space, noted his caution was not to instil fear, but to open the eyes of celebrities to the unseen battles that come with life in the limelight.

"Fame is not just about being recognised; it's a

KiDi

GUYS, is it just me, or why do I feel KiDi's Gymnastic song featuring Olivetheboy and Kojo Blak isn't really trending in Ghana?

I think the song is so dope, yet it seems to be gaining more traction outside the country than here at home.

I've watch others outside Ghana using it for TikTok videos, dances, and promotions, but in Ghana, the support seems minimal. That's disappointing because KiDi, Olivetheboy, and Kojo Blak are truly talented, and this track deserves massive love. Too often, we rally round negativity but fail to uplift the positive strides of our own artistes. Then we complain when Ghanaian acts struggle to reach international stage. We must remember that consistent local support can push our artistes far. Gymnastic is a solid song from KiDi, our very own 'Sugar Daddy' and he deserves our full backing. Let's do more to support and celebrate our own talent.

Kofi Adjorlolo

FOR years, I brushed off claims that acting in Ghana doesn't pay. But listening to Kofi Adjorlolo's interview on Adom FM has changed my mind completely.

I always imagined him to be very wealthy and worth millions even. So hearing him say he doesn't even own a car shocked me to the core. His explanation made sense, but it was still unexpected because many assumed he was rich.

Sadly, false information like that paints the wrong picture: people think you don't need help, which ends up blocking opportunities and support.

I hope his interview opens the eyes of those who once promised to help him, and also pushes for real change in the Ghanaian film industry.

Many veteran actors have voiced similar struggles. It's disheartening because, as children, we grew up thinking actors lived glamorous lives. Clearly, the industry must do better invest more, support its legends, and secure its future.

Daddy Lumba

WATCHING the one-week observation of Daddy Lumba at Independence Square moved me to tears.

I couldn't be there in person, but I joined thousands online to mourn and at the same time celebrate our Highlife icon.

What touched me most was the unity: Ghanaians, fellow celebrities, and countless of fans coming together to show love and respect. It was truly beautiful.

Daddy Lumba's songs have always inspired me, but today they carry even deeper meaning. I don't think we will ever have another legend like him—his music, passion, and legacy remain unmatched.

Though it hurts to ask why he left us so soon, we must accept that such is life, and one day we will all be called by our Maker.

Rest well, Charles Kwadwo Fosu. Damirifa duo, Daddy Lumba. You will always be remembered, cherished, and celebrated.

AFRIMA 2025

IAM so excited to see Ghanaian female artistes rising to the top! Have you seen the AFRIMA 2025 nominations for Best Female Artiste? Wow!

Our very own Amaarae, Moliy, and Wendy Shay have all been nominated in that category. Just being on that list is a huge achievement, and I am so proud of them. Our female artistes are proving themselves on the continental stage and flying the flag of Ghana high.

Let's rally behind them, show massive support, and vote. They truly deserve the crown. I pray one of them wins, but honestly, even the nomination alone is already a victory for Ghana. Let's celebrate them with love.
